

What Would I Do If I'm Lost In The Jungle

I wake up to the sound of leaves rustling. I opened my eyes and realize I'm not in my bed. I wasn't dreaming. I'm in the middle of what seems like a jungle all alone and disoriented. I have no idea how I got here or where I was. All I know was that I'm lost in the jungle.

Panic starts to set in. Who wouldn't be hysterical in this kind of situation? I was all alone in an unfamiliar place with no idea where to go or what to do or why I was there in the first place.

How to Navigate Back to Safety

Hollywood somehow likes the concept of getting lost or stranded in a desolate place. There's Tom Hanks in Cast Away, a young Brooke

Shields in The Blue Lagoon, the hit TV show Lost, and of course, the classic story of Tarzan. Many of these films are based on true stories of people who were stranded somewhere for some reason. The movies focused on the drama that happened while the protagonists struggle to find their way home back to their loved ones. How much easier it would have been if they only knew how to navigate back to safety.

Of course, it takes time to learn the different ways to navigate. It's not impossible, however. So if you don't want to end up making friends with a volleyball, you better learn as many survival skills as you can including how to navigate and avoid being the modern day version of Robinson Crusoe.
