Benefits of Halloween celebration to children

On Halloween day, children wear costumes and go from house to house on what is known as trick or treating. During this celebration, children meet homeowners and ask for treats like candy and in some cases money. The child asks the homeowner; "trick or treat"? If the person who answers the door doesn't give the child or children treats, then a trick is played on the homeowner. The pretend play is highly recommended for children as it helps the development of their language skills, social and emotional skills, thinking skill and it also helps in developing their imagination.

Language skills

During Halloween, you find your child using new words as they play the part of the villain or a hero. Their imitation of these character, as well as how they reenact stories can be very impressive, and this helps them make meaningful connections between written and spoken language which in turn helps them when it's time to learn how to read.

Social and emotional skill development

When a child joins other children in trick or treating during Halloween, that child actively experiments with emotional and social roles. This helps in the development of feelings and building self-esteem. It helps the child learn how to work with others in society.

Thinking and imaginative skills

In some cases, children have to develop strategies during trick or treating. They think of different ways through which they can punish the house owner that turns them down. This enhances their imagination and grooms them into innovative young members of society.

Best Books For Halloween

A Magical Halloween Adventure

Learn how two fairy children celebrate Halloween with human children. Halloween is an especially magical time for year where it is easy for human and fairy children to interact together. There are even some kinds of candy that they get while trick-or-treating that they've never had in Fairy Land before. Since sweets are one of a fairies main food groups, this is even more exciting to Isac and Isabell the fairy children.
